First, the harm that COVID-19 has caused to society. During the covid-19 outbreak, many people across the globe lost their jobs. Employees are let go by the company as a result. Finding clients can be challenging for business owners. Additionally, decreased revenue from tourism affects all nations. For instance, due to the presence of the Angkor Wat temple, Cambodia has benefited more financially from the tour. People are unable to travel around the country due to the outbreak of the coronavirus COVID-19. As a result, Cambodia has lost many tourists. Additionally, imports will outpace exports in developing nations.

Second, is how covid-19 has harmed families. We already know that COVID-19 is a fatal illness that claims many lives worldwide. After it spread, the majority of families lost individuals and were forced to deal with the covid-19, which prevented them from going to work. Additionally, many stay at home during COVID-19; they do not receive paid; instead, they simply pay the debt. because they must spend money on food and online education for their youngster. Thus, some families will experience financial loss. Additionally, if the family is still unable to manage their finances during the coronavirus outbreak, they will not have the resources to pay for their child to study online, which would result in the child's education being lost.

Third, the company's reaction to COVID-19 negatively. In a poor case, most businesses during the COVID-19 spread go out of business. Because some businesses need to rent homes or facilities for their operations as well as pay their employees quickly each month. If there is no income, they won't have any money to invest in it and will have to shut down their business. The majority of businesses also rely on partnerships to support their operations. They cannot assist one another if they are unable to make the same amount of money and there is no similar customer service available to them. Because of this, the majority of businesses are ending their partnerships and suffering. In addition to its effects, the majority of businesses encounter losing support. For instance, the majority of children during COVID-19 were required to stay at home for school, and most families believe their children are too young to learn on a computer or mobile device. They are not paying more for education because of this. As a result, the school won't have any funding to support its operations.

In conclusion, every human on earth had been impacted by COVID-19. Today, however, the COVID-19 is fully contained, and the majority of families, businesses, and society are returning to normal.
